with the Street and Madison Avenue, yesterday afternoon.

Five hundred guests, including foremost art authorities, collectors, art dealers and patrons, attended the reception, which also included an address by Thomas E. Kirby, veteran head of the association. Mr. Kirby, in tracing the high lights in the art market during the last generation, reverted to the loan exhibition, which probably established the reputation of George Inness, America's great landscape painter. He told of the inception and success of the prize fund exhibitions, also sponsored by the American Art Association in the 80s, which received the financial support of a dozen great American art patrons.
